

State Inspected Slaughter Plants

One of the most common questions the Meat & Poultry Bureau gets is, "Where can I take my beef to have it slaughtered and state inspected?" The answer, of course, is at a state-inspected facility, which are listed below. Livestock that is slaughtered and processed at a state-inspected plant can, with the proper licensing and labeling, be wholesaled or retailed. A livestock owner could, for example, sell state-inspected meat at a farmer's market or to a local restaurant. In contrast, "custom slaughter" meat is stamped "not for sale," and must go back to the owner of the livestock. Meat and meat products intended for shipment across state lines must be slaughtered and processed at a federally inspected facility.
